Rambam Student Earns Perfect Score On SATs

Josh Moskovits, a junior at Rambam Mesivta, was recently informed that he earned perfect math and verbal scores on the SATs. He had previously learned that he was flawless on the PSATs, putting him in the running for a National Merit Scholarship, and he was eagerly waiting to hear how he did on the SAT. When he discovered that he had achieved this rare feat that only .02% of people who take the exam achieve, he was speechless. Josh was mobbed in the halls of Rambam as students (and teachers) vied to shake the hand that shook the SATs.

"We are incredibly proud of this achievement," declared assistant principal Hillel Goldman, "Josh exemplifies the Rambam student's commitment to academic excellence and love of learning. Just a few hours after hearing about the score, he was one of the first students to arrive in our English class and he was enjoying The Great Gatsby simply because he enjoys learning for its own sake."

Rosh mesivta of Rambam, Rabbi Zev Meir Friedman, proclaimed that "We are so proud of Josh who excels in so many ways, doing so in such an understated manner. He is a real mensch, and always volunteers to help with anything that is needed. He will undoubtedly accomplish tremendous things on behalf of Klal Yisrael in the years ahead." Principal Rabbi Yotav Eliach noted that, "Josh's incredible score is not only a result of his remarkable intelligence; it's also a tribute to his hard work and diligence!"

"I credit my success to Professor

"I'm not sure what I want to do after high school, but right now I am interested in math, physics, and the stock market. Even though this is a nice accomplishment, it doesn't really change anything: I'm just trying to focus on midterms." ❖ makes—even if it seems less than what he can do. Rabbi Kramer used examples and stories from his own shlichus to bring home this point. He reminded the boys of how relevant the Alter Rebbe's teachings are and how much work there still is to do. He encouraged the boys to
